Reasons Why You Should Adopt A Shelter Pup Today

this used to be me just a wee little pup I was born with rickets meaning my legs and bones didn't develop properly due to malnourishment humans came and went but none of them wanted to adopt me I think it was because of my legs but that's okay because eventually these two fostered me they fed me well made sure I got lots of Sun and soon enough I felt much better after a couple of weeks they accidentally fell in love with me and became my forever parents and so this is me now living my best life I'm pretty handsome bit of a trendsetter some would see I hear Mum and Dad sometimes say that I'm spoiled rotten not really sure what that means but it must be a good thing because life is good these days

my mum and dad foster other puppies waiting for their long-term parents to find them like these guys here they're okay I mean it takes some of the attention and my clothes but I get it they look up to me you need a role model to teach them how to pose the quicker they know how to give their best puppy eyes the quicker they will be given peanut butter and hamburgers who else can tell on this sort of stuff but more importantly I really want them to find their forever homes like I did as much as I loved having for shelter puppies bite on my paws and stealing my fashion sense they deserve the unconditional love that I got in their age

it's important it builds a dog self-worth let's call a bone a bone humans need us no loyalty compare us the love that the dog provides a human we see past all the nonsense

the googling baby noises you make as we stare through you the endless photos they take of our stress in onesies and love you for who you are we reduce your stress levels we make you happier and we occasionally distract you from your phones and Netflix making you a healthier more active human you can thank us later but really we need you as much as you need us adopt a rescue part for your local shelter and reap the rewards of saving our life and improving yours also on the Wardrobe map
